Excerpt: .like me, is now the father of a family, was a boy here when I was a boy. I have had advantages which they have not enjoyed. I have seen many foreign countries, and lived in the world, and learnt much. Perhaps in this room I shall be able to communicate to them something of it. I have brought all my books with me. We shall see. At all events, he added, looking at his wife, these are my castles in the air. She returned his look with one full of love and sympathy. They went next into the present little kitchen, where they found Jenny s mother, Mrs Jones, a tidy-looking old woman, who offered her help for the day, which was gladly accepted. In the kitchen were plenty of cupboards, the dresser and shelves all empty and clean, ready to receive their useful loads, and a good grate and brick oven. Oh what is this place for? cried Robert, who was always in a hurry to see everything. This is where Jenny will wash up her plates and dishes, and in this other place she will clean the knives and shoes, answered Mrs Powis. And here is the coal cellar--I can see that, said Arthur. What great blocks of coal! Yes, said his father; that is our Welsh coal, and it is a great blessing to have it so cheap. And here is the wash-house, with a copper in it, said Mrs...
